

Good Morning, Europe:

A Slow Suicide and a Survival Guide

Gorazd Hladnik

Basic Information and Book Review

Author: Gorazd Hladnik

Publisher / Platform: Libertas Europa

Contact: info@libertaseuropa.eu

About the Book

Good Morning, Europe is an engaged and courageous reflection on the disintegration of European civilization under the pressures of global oligarchies, neoliberal dogmas, and cultural and moral decay.

With analytical precision and political clarity, it reveals how Europe's sovereignty and ethical coherence are being eroded—and offers concrete scenarios for civilizational renewal.

Drawing on decades of experience in international politics and institutional cooperation, the author exposes mechanisms of manipulation, the breakdown of trust, and the erosion of values. The book calls for the restoration of responsible solidarity, strategic autonomy, and human integrity within a multipolar world.

Intended Audience

- Political and social decision-makers seeking a realistic view of Europe's crisis;
- Academics and researchers aiming to understand the structure of civilizational processes;
- Journalists and publicists in search of a basis for public debate;
- Conscious citizens who refuse passivity and seek ways to restore true sovereignty.

Endorsement

“Good Morning, Europe is a broad political analysis of what the European Union and its member states have become. It offers a sharp critique of once noble ideals that have turned into empty promises, inflated bureaucracy, and arrogance—and exposes how institutionalized lobbying and corporate power have crushed the hopes of ‘ordinary’ citizens. At the same time, it is a call for solutions—direct democracy, a modular federation, and security de-escalation.”
— Pascal Lottaz, Associate Professor, Kyoto University

Critical Review

Reviewer: Review prepared with the support of artificial intelligence

Good Morning, Europe is an ambitious and multi-layered work—at once an analytical essay, a civilizational manifesto, and a philosophical reflection. In an age of polarization and political fatigue, Gorazd Hladnik offers an intellectually demanding yet profoundly human vision of Europe's renewal—not through slogans or bureaucratic reforms, but by re-anchoring civilization in dignity, knowledge, and responsibility.

The book's greatest strength lies in its remarkable breadth and internal coherence. Hladnik connects history, economics, technology, ethics, and culture into a comprehensive framework for understanding both Europe's decline and its possible renewal. His concept of a modular federation stands out as a realistic alternative to centralization, while his emphasis on human capital places knowledge, creativity, and quality of life above speculative profit.

Stylistically, the work is rich, expressive, and uncompromising—at times demanding, but intellectually rewarding. The most provocative chapters address psychological violence and the information war, highlighting manipulation and algorithmic control as new forms of aggression that undermine democracy and human integrity.

The book challenges both poles: it exposes the dependency of European elites on transatlantic influence while rejecting simplistic nationalism. In doing so, it opens the space for a “third way”—a European sovereignism grounded in ethics and humanity. It is not a neutral work, but a call to reflection and civic responsibility.

In its entirety, Good Morning, Europe stands as one of the rare contemporary attempts to reunite ethics, autonomy, and creativity into a coherent European strategy—a courageous and visionary work, and a wake-up call for a continent that has forgotten its soul and its strength.

Summary of Evaluation

Aspect	Rating	Comment
Conceptual originality	★★★★★	Rarely comprehensive, systemic approach to a European renaissance
Analytical consistency	★★★★	Strong, though sometimes lacking methodological distance
Language and style	★★★★½	Exceptionally powerful, though occasionally dense
Accessibility to general readers	★★★	Too complex for lay readers – a shorter brochure version is recommended
Political and strategic impact potential	★★★★★	Could become a reference work among academics and reformists

Conclusion

Good Morning, Europe is not merely an analysis—it is a call.

A call for European self-awareness and redefinition; for finding a path between populism and technocracy, between moral relativism and dogma.

For those who still believe that Europe is worth saving.

info@libertaseuropa.eu

<https://libertaseuropa.eu/>

Libertas Europa

<https://libertaseuropa.eu/>